REALTORS PLEDGE FAITH TO THEIR COMMUNITIES

The Redwood City realty board has revived an ancient Athenian pledge which boys on arriving at the age of 18 years recited publically. The realtors renew this ancient Athenian pledge to their respective cities.

"We will never bring disgrace to this city by any act of dishonesty or cowardice, nor ever desert our suffering comrades in the ranks.

"We will fight for the ideals and sacred things of the city, both singly and together. We will revere and obey the citys laws and do our best to incite a like respect and reverance in those above us who are prone to annul or set them at naught.

"We will strive unceasingly to quicken the public sense of civic duty. Thus in all these ways we will transmit this city not only not less, but greater, better and more beautiful than it was transmited to us."

Thousands View New Bridge

The opening of the Dumbarton bridge across the bay from Redwood City to Newark was an auspicious affair last Saturday. The event was witnessed by thousands, and during the day 10,000 machines passed over the new span.

The new bridge will considerably shorten the distance from points on the peninsula to Oakland and to the interior vallies, a saving of at least an hour being effected to any of these points. The new bridge will prove an important artery of commercial transportation. Already the California Transit Company has applied ti the railroad commission for a permit to operate between Livermore and San Francisco over the bridge.

WOODSIDE

Notwithstanding the low temperatures of the past two weeks, the evidences of approaching spring are abundant. The almond trees are in bloom, the new leaves are showing bright green on the oak trees and the blossoming acacias are dotting the landscape with splotches of gold. It is interesting, too, to note how the sun drops behind the rampant of the hills a half minute later on each succeeding night.

Lucius Morse was a visitor in Woodside last week. Mr. Morse was our pioneer in radio and the expert to whom we all turned with our troubles when radio was in its infancy. He built the first receiving set in this neighborhood and many of us made our first acquaintance with the mystery at his hom, and have not forgitten the thrill we felt at listening to programs from Salt Lake and Denver.

George Hansen has also been a visitor to Woodside. Mr. Hansen was for some time in charge of the Gilman Ayrshire Farm but left that position to return to the Argentine where he had been engaged in the cattle business some years ago. He did not find the conditions in South America to his liking and has returned to Califirnia without any desire to leave us again.

Thirty-five teachers, representing schools from Belmont to Ravenswood, were guests on Tuesday afternoon of Mrs. Bolton and Miss Zarovitch, teachers at the Portola School. Refreshments were served and a round-table discussion of pending school legislation held the attention of the teachers for an hour and a half.

The Parent-Teacher Association held a special meeting at their club rooms on Thursday afternoon. Mr. Ray Hohberger of Redwood City, and Mrs. Owen of San Mateo were visitors and tddressed the meeting. It was decided by the association to hold another card party on the evening of February 12th, and to begin, on Monday next, to furnish a hot supplement to the students' lunches.

The body of Joe Fortis, gardener on the Prowley place, was found on Wednesday by persons attracted by the continuous howling of a dog. His death was due to heart trouble and had occurred about four days before the body was discovered. His dog, apparently, had been keeping watch over his master's body since the time of his death.

OLD DRINKING FOUNTAIN IS REMOVED

The drinking fountain which for the past fourteen years has stood in front of the Central grammar school on Broadway was this week removed by the Redwood City street department. The fountain has not been in working order for a number of years and its removal was thought advisable for sanitary reasons.

The fountain was presented to the city by the Redwood City Woman's Club in October, 1912, and was erected as a memorial to Horace Hawes, who gave the first land for schools in Redwood City. The erection of the fountain was quite an event and was participated in by all the children of the schools.

The members of the Woman's Club were consulted as to the advisability of removing the fountain and they concurred in the opinion of the city authorities as to the necessity of its removal.

Visitors were present at this meeting from Fren Leaf Circle in San Francisco and some from Colorado. District Grand Neighbor Mrs. Bufold was also present and complimented the officers upon the efficient manner in which their work was done. Especial praise was given to Mrs. Loucks, captain of the guard.

Following the installation several musical numbers were given by Gordon Keith on a violin accompanied by Inez Jamieson on the piano, after which a banquet, which had been prepared by Mrs. Effie Townsend, was enjoyed.

GORGEOUS FANTASY OF DREAM SHOWN IN "TWINKLETOES"

One hundred and twenty beautiful dancing girls, who made themselves famous by performance at the Hollywood Bowl, are seen in Colleen Moore's latest picture, "Twinkletoes," showing at the Sequoia Theatre Monday and Tuesday, January 24-25.

They figure in a dream sequence in the picture and form an entrancing vision f feminine loveliess—also an effective contrast to the dingy but picturesque Limehouse atmosphere of "Twinkletoes."

The picture is an adaptation by Winifred Dunn of one of Thomas Burke's famous Limehouse stories produced for First National by John McCormick and directed by Charles Brabin.

Colleen herself—who, by the way, wears golden curls in "Twinkletoes" because the Burke heroine wore them—appears as a danser headlining a second group of dancers, "The Quayside Kids," at a Limehouse theatre.

Kenneth Harlan plays opposite the star in the role of a champion pugilist, and other picturesque characters of the famous slums by the Thames are depicted by Gladys Brockwell, Warner Oand, Tully Marshall, Julanne Johnston and John Philip Kolb.

Senate Ready to Exclude Mr. Smith of Illinois—Navy Controversy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FRANK L. SMITH, senator-designate from Illinois, will not be permitted to take his seat in the United States senate if the plan agreed upon by apparently a great majority of the senators is carried out. When and if he presents his credentials, they are to be referred to the committee on privileges and elections, and whatever may be the report of that committee on his qualifications, it seems certain that he will be excluded on the ground that he is disqualified for an office of public trust by his acceptance of money from the public utility magnates, whose properties were subject to the regulation of the Illinois commerce commission, of which he at the time was chairman.

This program was adopted after the senate had heard a long speech from McKellar of Tennessee, Democrat, vehemently demanding the exclusion of Smith. Borah, Deneen and some others indicated an intention of contending that Smith should be permitted to take the oath pending the investigation of his qualifications. This would permit him to defend himself before the senate, and it was said he was prepared to do this partly by telling the sources of Republican campaign funds in 1924 and arguing that he is no more disqualified for public office than is President Coolidge.

CONGRESSIONAL advocates of a bigger navy continued their effort toward that end during the week, but the President stood so firmly on his platform of economy that their ultimate defeat was predicted. They thought Mr. Coolidge had been forced to modify his program when Representative Tilson, Republican floor leader, introduced an amendment to the pending naval supply bill for an appropriation for the construction of the three unbuilt light cruisers authorized in 1924. But the President immediately wrote a letter to Representative French declaring that his attitude advising against any construction other than the completion of the five 1924 cruisers now under way, pending the outcome of negotiations for another limitation of armament conference, remains unchanged. Representative Britten of Illinois, who had introduced an amendment for the elevation of turret guns on 11 battleships, thought the President was too optimistic about that conference. Another amendment, providing for the construction of a new dirigible, was adopted.

Of almost equal importance in the matter of national defense was the inquiry into the general state of the army begun by the house military affairs committee. Among the first witnesses heard were Secretary of War Davis and Maj. Gen. Fox Conner, deputy chief of staff. They told the committee that the budget bureau's cuts in the appropriations asked by the War department would make necessary a reduction of 4,998 in the army personnel, which already is 8,000 below the average strength of the last four years.

In the senate the demands of the "big navy" men were voiced by Senator Johnson of California, who declared it the heighth of folly to cripple our first line of defense at a time when our war creditors are hating us and all the world is envying our prosperity. Senator Hale of Maine, chairman of the naval affairs committee and an administration supporter in most things, followed with a speech in favor of building the American navy in all classes of ships up to the 5-5-3 ratio established by the Washington conference.

WETS in both the senate and the house opened up a vigorous attack on the policy of the federal government which permits the use of deadly poisons in the denaturing of alcohol as a part of the enforcement of the prohibition law. They had a long list of deaths laid to the drinking of poisoned liquor during the holidays, and their denunciations were fierce. The senate adopted a resolution introduced by Edwards of New Jersey calling upon Secretary of the Treasury Mellon to produce whatever correspondence may have passed between the Treasury department and Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon league, in connection with the poisoning of industrial alcohol to make it unfit for beverage purposes. Several members of the house introduced resolutions and other measures dealing with the use of poisonous denaturants. Mr. Celler of New York raised a storm by asserting that congressmen drink to excess and refused to retract though others declared the assertion was "an utter falsehood."

Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, who fought the bootleggers and grafters of Philadelphia for many months, seems to have changed his mind about prohibition. In an address in Oakland, Calif., the commander of marines on the Pacific coast denounced the eighteenth amendment as class legislation, saying it reacted against the poor man and favored the rich one. Its principal demerit, he indicated, is the manner in which enforcement has grown out of it.

MATTERS between Cantonese forces and the British approached a real crisis last week when a mob of Chinese at Hankow, infuriated by anti-foreign harangues, attacked the British concession, took possession of public buildings, hoisted the revolutionary flag and forced the foreign business houses to close. The British residents fled to the French and Japanese concessions and all the British women and children in Hankow, Kiugiang and Ichang were removed by vessels, most of them being taken to Shanghai. The Cantonese officials were appealed to by the British consul and the inadequate British forces there were withdrawn, control of the area being surrendered to the nationalist commander. The British government ordered naval reinforcements from Hongkong, and American and French naval forces were held ready to land if the necessity arose. The hostility of the natives in the Yangtse valley so far is directed almost wholly against the British.

FOR the first time since their withdrawal in August, 1925, the American marines are in Managua, Nicaragua, together with some American sailors—166 in all—commanded by Capt. Julius C. Townsend of the navy. Landing from the U. S. S. Galveston at Corinto, the party went to the capital by train and was warmly welcomed by the Nicaraguan national guard and the officials of the Diaz government. It was sent to Managua ostensibly to guard the American legation and on the recommendation of Admiral Latimer, who is maintaining the neutral zone he established along the eastern coast of Nicaragua. Actually one of the important factors prompting this action by the Washington government is the determination to protect the proposed canal route across Nicaragua, for which the United States paid $3,000,000, and also to protect our leased naval base on the Gulf of Fonseca. Support of the Diaz government is a part of this policy. Fully as important as the landing of the marines was the decision of President Coolidge to lift the embargo on the shipment of arms and to permit Diaz to get the 1,000 rifles, 100 machine guns and several million rounds of ammunition which he purchased in the United States. This was not pleasing to Senator Borah, who declared that under existing conditions it was intervention. The foreign relations committee of the senate, which has before it a resolution by Senator Wheeler calling for immediate withdrawal of American naval forces from Nicaragua, decided to ask Secretary Kellogg to explain to it this week the entire Nicaraguan situation.

PRESIDENT CALLES of Mexico has begun the enforcement of the petroleum law, involving the prosecution of the foreign oil companies operating on lands to which they have, under that law, no legal right, having failed to apply for concessions confirming their titles. The lands will be forfeited to the government. It is expected that the oil companies will seek injunctions against the dispossession proceedings. Automatically the dispute between them and the Mexican government will thus be thrown into the Supreme court. There it may wage for many months, if not for years. Meanwhile, if they continue to extract oil from the properties they occupy illegally, they face federal suits for indemnification.

TWO important manifestoes emanated from Premier Mussolini of Italy last week. In one the duce orders the prefects of all provinces to suppress ruthlessly all illegalism and violence by Fascists, especially when directed against the representatives in Italy of foreign nations. Particularly Mussolini referred to "squadrism," a word coined recently in Italy to describe the act of "squadristi," or little bands of Fascist strong-arm men, who, while important in the days immediately preceding the establishment of the Fascist regime, have now outlived their usefulness.

At the same time the duce announced that Fascism henceforth meant the Italian state, and, through the cabinet, further fascistized the state by extending to all employees of the public administration the law providing for the dismissal of employees hitherto applicable to the central political departments.

BRIG. GEN. RAFAEL CRAME, chief of the Philippine constabulary, died a few days ago, and another conflict over his successor is due between Governor General Wood and the Philippine senate under the leadership of Manuel Quezon. It is regarded as certain that General Wood will name an American for the post, and Quezon says the senate will not confirm the appointment of an American. General Crame, who was appointed by former Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison, was of Spanish-Filipino descent. He was considered fairly efficient as chief, but the organization, which is thoroughly Philippinized except for about a dozen American field officers, is admittedly not up to the standard set when American army officers headed it.

IN A report to the President, the United States St. Lawrence river commission advocated the immediate construction of the St. Lawrence shipway as a measure of transportation relief for the Middle West. The conclusions of the commission are thus summarized:

"First: The construction of the shipway from the Great Lakes to the sea is imperative both for the relief and for the future development of a vast area in the interior of the continent.

"Second: The shipway should be constructed on the St. Lawrence route, provided suitable agreement can be made for its joint undertaking with the Dominion of Canada.

"Third: The development of the power resources of the St. Lawrence should be undertaken by appropriate agencies.

"Fourth: Negotiations should be entered into with Canada in an endeavor to arrive at agreement upon all these subjects. In such negotiations the United States should recognize the proper relations of New York to the power development in the international section."

Senator Shipstead of Minnesota introduced a resolution requesting the President to enter into the necessary negotiations with Canada. It was indicated at the White House that President Coolidge regards the reports favoring the St. Lawrence project as representing the judgment of the best experts available, but that he has not yet given his own indorsement.

TRANS-ATLANTIC radiophone service between New York and London was put in operation on Friday. The first communication was a formal one between Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, and Sir G. Evelyn P. Murray, secretary of the British general post office. After that the "line" was thrown open for general service and there was plenty of that, for applications had been coming in for many days.

SOUTHERN California started in the New Year with a series of 50 severe earthquakes that, while killing no one, did a lot of damage in the Imperial valley. The effects of the temblors was felt also in northern Mexico. The heaviest losses were in Calexico and its sister town, Mexicali, across the border.

United States Holds Big Treasury Surplus

The federal treasury ended the first half of its fiscal year with a surplus of $218,279,937, compared with $125,598,300 for the same period a year ago.

Income tax and customs receipts flowed in during the last quarter in increasing amounts, accounting for most of the excess.

During the year ending December 31 the treasury reduced the public debt by $1,173,504,301 to a total of $19,074,695,337. Of this reduction $314,353,900 was accomplished during the last month.

Customs receipts for the first six months of the present fiscal year amounted to $318,817,857, compared with $292,621,815 a year ago. A total of $48,431,263 was collected from customs in December, or $2,000,000 more than last December.

Income tax collections for the six months were $1,046,840,959, compared with $855,739,015 last year. In December these receipts totaled $429,228,919.

Miscellaneous taxes, many of which were repealed by the new revenue law, yielded only $334,456,346 for the first six months of this fiscal year, compared with $487,889,572 a year ago, a difference of $153,433,166.

Although calculations based on the figures for the first six months would show a surplus of almost $500,000,000 for the year, Undersecretary Winston declared the surplus would be about $383,000,000.

Persons believing in the popular myth that Aileen Pringle, movie star, was born in Europe, can now be disillusioned. And all on account of a fire. Flames believed to have been started by a tramp burned her old home, Snowden Hill, to the ground recently. The house, where the star was born, was a two-story frame building erected by her father, the late George Bisee, near Auburn. It has been vacant for the past several years.

MESSAGE TO FRANCE

With a musical "ping," Suzanne Lenglen's magic tennis racket sent a white sphere whirling into the air at Palo Verde estates near Los Angeles. The ball was snared by Jimmie James, air mail flyer, who immediately nosed his plane into the eastern skies and nodded an acknowledgment of the farewell wave of the great French net star. Written on the ball, which ultimately will arrive at the desk of the President of France, was a New Year's greeting to the French people and their chief executive, written in the characteristic impetuous hand of Mlle. Lenglen.

Belgian Financier Is Amateur Boxer

Alfred Lowenstein, the Belgian banker, who some time ago offered to loan $50,000,000 to Belgium without interest, is an amateur boxer of great ability and a fencer of no mean repute. He is a short, thickset man and would just about make the middleweight boxing division.

Strike-Out Record for 1926 Awarded to Yanks

The New York Yankees, pennant winners of the American league last season, carried off a rather dubious record. The Yanks were the easiest team in the league for opposing twirlers to strike out.

A free-swinging club is always the easiest to take on strikes, and the Yankees were no exception to the rule.

With a team composed of Ruth, Meusel and Paschal in the outfield, Gazella at third and Koenig at short, Lazzeri on second, Gehrig at first and Pat Collins behind the bat, the club, exclusive of the pitcher, averaged 53 strike outs per player during the season.

Tony Lazzeri, who fanned so ignominiously in the final game of the world series when Alexander relieved Haines with the bases filled, was merely living up to his season's reputation.

When "Push 'Em Up Tony" was hitting the ball on the nose he also was indulging in plenty of strike outs, leading the league in that respect with 96. Despite this, Tony was a much feared batter.

Here are the number of strike outs by various Yanks: Lazzeri, 96; Ruth, 76; Gehrig, 72; Collins, 55; Koenig, 37; Paschal, 35; Meusel, 32; Gazella, 24, a total of 427 for eight regular players.

Bill has been in the real estate game at Bradentown, Fla., since he retired from the game after the 1924 season. He is also available as a coach.

Rather Be a Nurmi Than a President

Most every boy in Finland hopes to be a Nurmi. Childhood dreams are not centered upon the presidency of the republic, but rather on world championship in athletics.

For the present, the street urchin's height of ambition is the attainment of a wrist watch. Nurmi, he figures, is successful because he times his pace. Hence the first prerequisite for a future Nurmi is a timepiece.

MEENAN ON GAME OF BASKET BALL

Columbia Coach Lays Stress on Floor Work.

"Learn to catch a basket ball and throw it; practice floor work and basket shooting; develop wind and speed."

In those few words Dan Meenan, coach of the University of Columbia's 1926 eastern intercollegiate champions, writing in the American Boy Magazine, advises high-school teams to spend their practice hours on the fundamentals of basket ball rather than strategy and "fancy" play.

"Give me a team that knows how to pass, catch and shoot," says Meenan, who was an All-Eastern player and captain of the Columbia team in 1914, "and I think I can beat the team that knows every 'trick' play and every bit of court strategy in the books, but is faulty in fundamentals."

Meenan coaches his team in a simplified style of play. He teaches only one kind of pass—a one-handed pass without spin that travels at shoulder height.

"It stands to reason," he says, "that if you know this one pass perfectly you'll be more accurate than if you know a dozen fancy passes imperfectly.

To reduce fumbling he tells his men to catch the ball with their hands palms inward, rather than with palms to the front.

One kind of shot for the basket is enough for the Columbia team, the chest shot, delivered smoothly and without English. A variation of it for use under the basket is the one-handed shove, delivered from the chest. In all basket shooting, Meenan says, strive for rhythm and smoothness. Crouch a little, if necessary, shoot your hands out straight for the basket, and leave your feet. This gives you a continuous graceful technique, and creates deliberate, careful shooting rather than nervous "snap."

Columbia bases its system of play on three hard and fast rules:

On defense, always keep between your man and the basket, forcing him toward the side lines.

On offense, never catch a ball standing still; keep your opponent from intercepting it by going to meet it.

After you have completetd a pass, get ready to receive the ball again.

Meenan does not teach the five-man defense. The minute Columbia loses the ball every player rushes to cover an opponent and force him either to pass it or lose it. This style of defense, he admits, only works when the team is composed of five fast men who possess stamina.

Dribbling has little place in Meenan's system of play.

"Never dribble," he cautions, "unless you are coming up to the basket for a shot and there's no one in front of you." The dribbler is usually slow enough to give the other team time to get set; he destroys floor work and leaves four men idle.

The way to stop a dribbler, Meenan says, is not by trying to guard him from behind, but by running around him and placing yourself squarely in front of him. He can't charge you, and if he shifts you can move to meet him.

On offense Columbia players are cautioned always to keep the area under the basket clear. They are instructed to pass the ball and maneuver at least fifteen feet from the basket until one man sees his opportunity to cut in under the hoop for a short shot.

Yanks in Right Field

Miller Huggins used more men in right field during the 1926 season than in any of the other regular positions. Six Yankees saw service in right. They were Bob Meusel, Babe Ruth, Earl Combs, Carlyle, Davis and Paschal. Meusel and Paschal were used in both center and left as well. All told, Huggins employed thirty-nine players in the various stations, not a single Yankee going through the chase without missing some time along the way.

If Back Hurts Flush Kidneys

Drink Plenty of Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

The Pessimist

Governor Gore of West Virginia was talking about the Mexican situation.

"You can look at it," he said, "either optimistically or pessimistically. A good many of us incline to be pessimists in the matter.

"Yes, we're like the chap to whom an optimist said:

"'There's nothing like hope.'

"'There certainly isn't,' was the answer, 'for disappointing you.'"

The Dollar You Spend

Dollars are in many respects like sons, and will like sons return in a large measure the treatmen which you give to them. Wisely invested in some good proposition, or deposited in one of the local banks, they will not only earn good interest, but will aid materially in building up your town.

When it comes time to spend the dollar which has been working for you, you may keep its friendship by spending it with one of the local merchants. In this case you can not only get a dollar's worth of merchandise, but that same dollar invested by the merchant helps to increase his stock, and so you have a better supply to pick from; it increased the value of his business, and in that way helps to keep your own taxes within bounds; it helps your neighbor to prosper and adds to the general prosperity of your community. Like an obedient son this dollar leaves its home to work for its employer, and aids in the upkeep of its home.

This same dollar may be driven from home by being spent in some other town. In this case, like the son who is driven from home by his father, the dollar will work for its new master. It will aid in developing a town in which you have no direct interest. It will not help your neighboring merchant to increase his stock. but will enable the outside merchant by doing so to attract its brother and sister dollars away from the home town.

Better Lay Off

We believe that it would be a very grave mistake for this country to meddle with the domestic affairs of Nicaragua or any other American state. The United States should guard carefully the interests of its citizens, but to make these interests an excuse to overthrow one government, or to maintain that government in power against will of any other faction of that country, would be a move totally without occasion. When American capitalists invest money in Mexico and South American states they know the conditions which prevale in those countries, and that the governments are at best unstable. This is a chance which they take in return for the large profits which they expect from their investments. This being the case, it would seem to us that they and they alone should take the consequences should a revolution occur. Too often the workingmen of a nation are forced into sacrifices for conquests which gain them nothing, while the monied interests who reap the benelt, stand no proper part of the loss.

—o—o—o—

EQUAL RIGHTS-EQUAL PRIVILEGES

Recent proceedings in the neighboring town of Mayfield somewhat make us wonder if some of its citizens have not failed to grasp the fundamental principle upon which this country was founded—equal rights and equal opportunities for all of its citizens. We see there a case of citizens of this country; citizens whose ancestors for generations have been born and raised here; citizens who have fought in the wars in whch this nation has been involved, and done their part to make this nation what it is today. Yet these people would be deprivel of the right to make their home among us—why? Because God in His wisdom has seen fit to make their skin black.

We are not partial to the negro, nor to any other race, but we believe that in race prejudice lies the weakness of our nation. Lincoln said: "* * * our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." Yet we, if we fail to grasp the significance of the equality of man, we may defeat the very endeavors of the founders of the nation, for a country in which some rights are vouched-safe to some citizens and others to other citizens can not long remain a free country nor one in which the government acts by the consent of the governed.

And with regard to our negro friends, it would be well to remember that while other foreigners have been welcomed by this country, these people are, will we make amends for the piracies of the came here, not of their free will and accord, but because of the avarice and inhuman greed of our own ancestors. Not till we forget the difference in color. and accept the negro and the white man alike, not for their complection, but for what they are, yill we make amends for the piracies of the last century in Africa.

KIWANIS CLUBS CELEBRATE TWELVTH YEAR OF FOUNDING

The twelvth year of existence of the Kiwanis movement was fittingly celebrated by Kiwanis clubs throughout the United States and Canada during this week. The Redwood Kiwanis club in conformity to the custom of the organization set aside its meeting of this week for a special program in commemoration of the founding of the movement.

Frank K. Towne, immediate past president of the local club, acted as chairman of the meeting and introduced the speaker, Frank Beckman, a member of the San Francisco Kiwanis club. Beckman had as his subject the human side of business and personality in business, and his address was much enjoyed by the Kiwanians.

Lee T. Ross gave a brief summary of the history of the Kiwanis movement and some of the objectives.

From one club the service organization has grown until at present there are 1635 clubs with a membership of 100,000. Kiwanis clubs are located all over the United States and Canada.

In discussing today the twelve years of Kiwanis history, Ralph A. Amerman, of Scranton, Pa., president of the organization, stressed the importance of those early leaders who made it possible for Kiwanis to form its objectives, which include the aiding of the under-privileged child, the creating of a better understanding between the farmer and city man, and the work of maintaining a sound public opinion and a more itelligent citizenship for considering problems of national and international interest.

"We have actually put into practice altruistic policies and our high ideals to which our first leaders of vision dedicated Kiwanis," the Kiwanis president remarked. "We have exemplified the daily living of the Golden Rule, the forming of more enduring friendships, the building of better communities, and the rendering of high service."

"However, we are not unmindful of our many responsibilities of the future," Mr. Amerman assured members. "As Kiwanians we dedicate ourselves to action. We renew our pledge to the future generation to carry forward in a practical way the high ideals of Kiwanis."

Too often the absence of pain lulls to the belief that there can be nothing serious wehreas, this very absence of pain in an evident growth should arouse suspicion and drive her to the doctor. Every lump or swelling should receive immediate medical attention. Apparent good health is no guarantee that cancer is not present.

Any irregularity at the "change of life" should be reported to the doctor. Especially if after menstruation has ceased for several months, or a year or more, any discharge appears, whether of blood or a leucorrhoea, consult the doctor because this very often means cancer. He will apply the tests until suspicion of malignancy is allayed.

MAXIMS

Submit every swelling to the doctor at once. Fear NEGLECT of cancer more than cancer itself, for cancer is conquered if discovered early enough.

Surgical operations in this day are rendered painless, and safer through improved anaesthetics. Dread of hospital has given place to grateful appreciation.

Never allow "change of life" to explain any ailment whatsoever. The female breast should be uniformly soft with no lump discoverable in it. Seek medical advice for any continued or recurring abdominal enlargement, tenderness, or pain.

THE EXPECTANT MOTHER MUST NOT GET FAT

By Hilbert F. Day, M. D., Boston, Mass.

Member Gorgas Memorial Institute.

A normal woman, allowed to eat whatever she wishes while she is pregnant, would ordinarily lose a litle weight during the first three months and then gain from 20 to 35 pounds. That is what our mothers were allowed to do, but it is not what the modern obstetician endorses.

A careful physician insists on the monthly weighing of his obstetrical cases. If he finds that his patient loses much weight during the first three months, he makes a distinct effort to keep her up to normal by added rest, extra food, best taken shortly after each meal so as not to interfere with the appetite for the next meal, and changes in the composition of her diet.

His chief difficulty is that the patient puts on weight too rapidly and he believes that obesity should not be allowed for several reasons:

First, because he expects that a woman who is in the best physical condition will have an easier and more normal labor; secondly, he expects that an over-fat woman will have a fat and therefore over-weight baby; and thirdly, he knows that if his patient puts on a lot of fat, her birth canal must be somewhat lessened in size and her muscles more flabby.

His experience has taught him that patients who are over-weight, so over-weight as to be fat, are more apt to have convulsions, while those who are not fat are not so susceptible.

The patient herself, in consulting a doctor who is going to see her through her pregnancy, wishes to be discharged in as good condition as possible. If, when everything is over and she is able to get about again, she finds she weighs 25 pounds more than normal, it does not take a doctor to tell her that she is not in the best possible shape. She does not feel as well as usual and she has lost her figure.

The time to avoid this obesity is during pregnancy rather than after maternity; for it is much more difficult to keep down weight when additional food is being taken to make added milk supply.

No one knows better than the physician how difficult it is to restrict diet, particularly when there is a constant real craving for food and all the patient's frineds are urging her to eat. If the patient shows the proper fortitude, she will be rewarded and her friends pleased by her condition when he childbearing period is over.

What might happen to her? What might be happening even now? And what assurance had he that even if he again succeeded in entering the house, a very remote possibility, he could accomplish anything against Shaw and his companions? Oh, if only he had waited and brought Rodney with him! Together, he felt, the two of them could have met and overcome a regiment of men like Shaw and his secretary.

A wild impulse came to him to take Burke with him in his second effort, but an appraising look at that seedy individual checked it. He was convinced that Burke could neither fight nor keep his mouth shut. Owing to his promise to Doris, police help, of course, was out of the question. No, he must go back alone. But this time there would be no semi-ignominious departure. He would either bring Doris away, or he would remain there with her. And if Shaw wanted trouble, he'd get it, and it would be the real thing.

That afternoon, on his first visit to The Cedars, his new instinct of caution had made him leave behind him the little revolver he had brought. He knew his own hot temperament too well to risk carrying it, and he had an arrogant faith in his own physical strength which, as a rule, had been justified. Now, however, he retrieved the weapon, and with a sudden tightening of the lips dropped it into his overcoat pocket.

When he was dressed he went out to look over his car. Burke, who was evidently fascinated by the slender racer, rose from an admiring inspection of the engine as its owner approached.

"She's ready any minute now," he reported. "She's had gas, oil and air, and I've put on the chains. Thought you'd want 'em, in this storm."

Laurie nodded and glanced out at the window. The storm had developed into a blizzard. His optimism, somewhat numbed in the past hour, reasserted itself to suggest that nature was helping him to meet the odds against him in the old house down the road. He glanced at his watch. It was not yet quite five, but certainly there was darkness enough for his purpose. He could safely take the car into the side wood road near The Cedars, and leave it there among the trees until he needed it. He handed Burke his final offering, the size of which wholly dispelled that philosopher's pessimistic forebodings. Jumping into his car, he backed it out into the storm.

"Hey, there! what about these clo'es?" demanded Burke, indicating with a thumb the abandoned heap of garments in the office.

"Eat 'em," briefly advised the occupant of the disappearing car. Burke shook his head. Garage men are used to hectic human types and strange happenings, but this particular type and incident were new to Burke. He was also interested in the discovery that the young fella wasn't going to New York, now that his joke was played. He was going straight up the road, in the wrong direction, and driving like the devil. Well, anyway, Burke had made a tidy bit on that joke, whatever it was. Gazing affectionately at the latest crisp bill, he thought of his wife and the seventh, and nobly decided to forgive them both.

Laurie, his hot head cooled by the storm that beat against him, raced through the gathering darkness. He had the road to himself. In weather like this no one was abroad who could stay at home. He turned off into the country road, already deep in snowdrifts, and swept on through the little wood whose leafless birches now looked unfamiliar, even spectral, in the increasing gloom. Save for the soft purr of his engine, his progress made no sound. He drove as far as he dared, then stopped the car off the road, in a clear space among the trees, and continued his way on foot. He must leave the car there, and take the chance of having it discovered. In the storm and darkness that chance seemed very remote.

He plunged on toward the house, knee-deep, now, in the drifts that swept across the narrow road. Soon the building was visible in its somber setting, and as he stared at its dim outlines his heart leaped. In the right-hand corner, on the second floor, a light showed faintly through drawn shades. The sight filled him with an overwhelming relief. Until he saw it, he had not realized how great his inner panic had been. He stopped, drew a deep breath, and stood staring up at it.

The rest of the house looked black and uninhabited, but somewhere within it, he was sure, Shaw and the blond secretary watched and waited. To the Italians he gave no thought. He was convinced that neither of them cared to come alone to close quarters with him; and this conviction was so strong that the prompt retreat of the fellow with the rope had not surprised him, either at the moment or in retrospect, though both men had fought well under Shaw's eyes. If the Italians were again on guard in the grounds, it would be his job to choke them off before they could warn Shaw of his presence. Warning Shaw, he hoped, was about all they were good for.

His plan, fully made, was very simple. He had no intention of risking another encounter if it could be avoided. His purpose was to get Doris out of that house, back to New York, and in Louise Ordway's care with the least possible difficulty and delay. That done, he could take up his little affair with Shaw. Even against the blond secretary he felt no personal rancor. The youth with the pursuing eyes and the chloroform was merely a wretched pawn in Shaw's game.

In Shaw's game! The phrase stuck, burning into his consciousness like the vitriol he believed the beast would use if he dared. What was Shaw's game? Why was he so smugly sure of it? And why, oh, why, why, was Doris seemingly numb to its danger, yet anxious for his help? For the first time he gave definite shape to a reflection that for hours had been trying to catch his attention, and from which he had restively turned. It was this:

When those four men, headed by Shaw, had entered that upper room, Doris had not been surprised. She had expected them. Moreover, she had not been really afraid. Instead, she had worn a look of flaming anger and of sudden resolution. She had stepped forward as if to speak. Her very lips had been parted for speech. Then, Shaw had looked at her, and slowly she had turned away and stood staring out of the window, her back to the room and its tableau. In short, with one glance of his veiled, protruding eyes, Shaw had conquered her, and Laurie himself had seen, what no one could have made him believe, her instantaneous and complete submission.

It was this revelation which had added the smoke barrage of doubt to the situation, clouding his faculties and temporarily stifling his faith. In the face of this, how could he still trust? Yet he had promised to trust, to believe, "whatever happened." Those had been his own words, and she had wept and told him he was "wonderful"!

The deep breath he had drawn ended in a sigh. He was fighting more than one storm, and in this instant he felt an indescribable weariness of soul and body. But not for a second did he hesitate in the course he had decided on. Later, when Doris was safe, perhaps things would clear up. For the moment there was one thing, and one alone, to be done.

The trees around the house made the approach under their cover a fairly easy one. However, he moved slowly, missing no precaution. He hardly believed the zeal of the Italians would keep them out in the storm, but they might have rigged up some sort of shelter, or, more probably, they might be doing sentry work at some of those dark windows.

Clinging close to the trees, he skirted the house, then approached it from the rear, and slipped along the side of the building, hugging the wall. As he noiselessly moved he listened, but no sound came from inside. When he reached the front right wing he stopped, and, looking up, verified his swift impressions of the afternoon.

A wide veranda swung around the front and side of this wing, supported by substantial pillars, up any one of which he knew he could climb like a cat. The roof of the veranda opened on the low French front windows of the upstairs sitting-room. There was no question that within a few moments he himself could enter that sitting-room.

The real question, and again he carefully considered it, was how, once in the room, he could get the girl out of it. She could not climb railings and slide down pillars. There was a window on the rear end of the wing, above what plainly served in summertime as a veranda dining-room. This end of the veranda was glassed in, and over it a trellis afforded a support for frozen vines that now shivered in the storm. If he could get Doris out at that window, he might be able to get her down to the ground with the help of the trellis. But from what room did the window open, and how much of the upper hall would they have to traverse before reaching it? Not much, he fancied.

Again he looked around, and listened. There was no sound or motion, save those caused by the storm. The next instant he was climbing the pillar toward the dimly lighted window. The ascent was not so easy as he had pictured it. To his chagrin, he made several unsuccessful efforts before he finally drew himself over the top of the veranda roof, and, lying flat in the snow, slowly recovered the breath exhausted by his efforts.

Lying thus, and stretching out an arm, he could almost touch the nearest window with his fingers, almost, but not quite. Still lying flat, he dragged himself a yard farther. His head was now in line with the window, but the close-drawn shade shut out all but the suggestion of the inner light. He hesitated a moment, then, very cautiously, tapped on the frosty pane.

There was no response. He tapped again, and then a third time, twice in succession and more compellingly. This time he thought he heard a movement in the room, but he was not sure.

He waited a moment, then softly signaled again. There was no question now about the movement in the room. He heard it distinctly, heard it approach the window, heard it cease, then saw the curtain slowly drawn. The face of Doris looked out, at first vaguely, as if she had fancied the noise some manifestation of the storm. But in the next instant she glanced down, saw him, and obviously checked an exclamation. In another moment she had opened the window, and without straightening up he had slipped across the sill.

Neither spoke. Laurie was looking about the room, reassuringly empty, save for those two. He closed the window, drew the shade, and became conscious that she held his hand and was drawing him urgently toward the fire. At the same time she answered his unasked question.

"They're all down in the kitchen, I think. Listen!"

She opened the door leading to the hall, and, going out, leaned over the stair-rail.

"Yes, they're still there," she reported when she came back. "All but one of the Italians. They're eating now, and after that I think they're planning to leave."

"Where's the bag?"

"Waiting on them."

She spoke detachedly, almost dully. As in the morning, she was not surprised; but tonight there was in her manner a suggestion of repressed excitement which it had not held before.

"Have you a heavy coat?" he asked her.

"Yes."

"Get it and put it on, quick. Don't waste any time." He indicated the buckled house-shoes she still wore. "And put on some real shoes, if you have them."

Without replying, she disappeared. He followed her into the bedroom in which, during the hours of his presence that afternoon, the bag had found uneasy asylum. He indicated a door.

"Where does that lead?"

"Into a bathroom."

"There's a back window over the veranda. What room does that mean?"

"A bedroom off the hall."

"Good!"

She followed his thought. "But I don't think we can risk that. One of the Italians is patrolling the hall. That's why they haven't locked the door. I caught a glimpse of him just now, coming toward the foot of the stairs."

He stared at her frowningly, then, walking to the bed, stripped it with an arm-swing and seized the sheets.

"Then it's simply a question of lowering you from the front," he cried, curtly. "I'll lower you as far as I can, and we'll have to risk a drop of a few feet. Snow's safe."

As he spoke, he was hurriedly tearing and roping the sheets. "Used to do this at school when I was a kid," he explained. "Quite like old times. Now get on the coat and shoes, please."

She needed the reminder. She was staring at this visitor, who had the face of the man she knew and the voice and manner of a stranger. All trace of young Devon's debonair indifference was gone. He had the cold eyes and set jaw of a determined man, busy at some task which would assuredly be done, but his air of detachment equaled her own.

When she was ready, and still with his new air of businesslike concentration on the job in hand, he adjusted the linen ropes, and after a preliminary survey of the grounds, led her through the window and out on the veranda roof. Here he briefly told her what to do, suiting action to words with entire efficiency, and assuming her unquestioning obedience as a matter of course.

The lowering was not the simple exercise he had expected, any more than the upward climb had been. Light as she was, it was clear that her unsupported weight would be a heavy drag upon a body resting insecurely on a slippery roof with nothing more substantial than snow and ice to cling to. But eventually she was down, a little shaken but unhurt, and he was beside her.

"Now, let's see how fast you can run," he suggested; and for the first time his whispered voice held a ring of youth she knew. "Shaw's watchers may suddenly begin to watch, or even to see something."

She responded to his changed tone with an uncontrollable gasp of relief, which he attributed to excitement.

"Don't worry. All right now, I think," he said, with an immediate return to curtness. It steadied her as no other attitude on his part could have done.

"Can you drive a Pierce Arrow?" he asked, as they plunged ahead through the snowdrifts.

"Yes."

"That's fine. That's great. I was afraid you couldn't." This was Laurie again. He went on urgently. "If we're stopped or separated, do exactly as I say. Don't lose an instant. Rush to my car. It's over there, among the trees. See?—over there at the right. It's turned toward the road." He indicated the spot. "Get in, go to the left at the first turn, drive full speed to a garage a quarter of a mile down the main road. No matter what happens, don't stop till you reach it. Go into the garage, and wait half an hour for me. If I'm not there then, drive on to New York and go to this address." He gave her a penciled slip he had prepared. "Mrs. Ordway is a good friend of mine. She'll take you in and look after you. Will you do that?"

"Yes." The word was so low that he had to bend his head to catch it. His voice softened still more.

"Don't worry. It will be all right. Only, some way, I can't believe that Shaw is letting us off as easily as this."

She stumbled, but he caught her. For a moment he supported her, and in that moment, under the sense of her nearness and dearness and helplessness, the hardness of the past hour disappeared. He did not understand her. Perhaps he would never understand her. But whatever she was, she was all right.

Half leading, half carrying her, he got her to the car and into it. He had actually raised one foot to follow her when something stirred in the shadows near them, and the familiar, squat figure of Shaw stepped forth.

Though in his sudden appearance he had followed the dramatic instinct that seemed so strong in him, he had wholly lost the effect of unleashed fury he had worn in the afternoon. He was even smiling with an affectation of good-humored tolerance. He had the air of a man who, with the game in his hands, can afford to be patient and affable.

"Oh, come now," he said easily, "don't leave us quite so soon! Since you've come back for another visit, we've decided to keep you a while. You know, I warned you of that."

Laurie made a sign to Doris, which she instantly obeyed. Even before the indolent voice had finished speaking, she was at the wheel and the car had started. Shaw, springing forward with goggling eyes and dropped jaw, found his way blocked by a man as new to him as he had been to Doris, a Laurence Devon who all in an instant had taken on the black rage he himself had dropped. In the hands of this stranger was a revolver which neatly covered Shaw's plump chest. Before this apparition, Shaw backed away precipitately.

Lions bigger than the largest African lions of today once roamed in California.

SIMPLE GEORGETTE FROCK; WRAPS FOR YOUNG GIRLS

AMAZINGLY clever fabric manipulation with dependence placed upon striking color for individualism rather than the presence of applied trimming—this is the fashionist's conception of a perfect gown for dinner, dance or formal afternoon wear.

For the dress which relies entirely upon fabric manipulation, georgette has proven itself an ideal medium. The Paris vogue for black has given an exceptional style prestige to the all-black georgette frock for evening wear, void of trimming but abounding in the intricacies of floating panels and draperies, myriads of tiers.

FEATURED BY ABSENCE OF TRIMMING

Two of the most recent items in fabric treatments are the inset belt and the large bow of self-material. Bows similar to that which enhances the dress in the picture are being featured more than ever on dresses of soft sheer goods.

As to belt effects, the smartest are worked in as part of the making of the dress, and in a measure, answer to the call for intricate seaming, which dressmakers say is part of the styling program for the coming season. Panels suspended from the shoulder also give unique and graceful touch to this model aptly demonstrating the beautiful effects achieved in the handling of the material, which mark the more exclusive styling.

Color plays a most spectacular part in the late winter's style program. It is a flame color georgette which was chosen for the development of the frock here shown, this brilliant shade distinguishing it from the ordinary at any social gathering. Reds of every hue are very fashionable for evening wear.

Captivating tone-on-tone effects are employed for many a georgette party dress. For instance, a tiered skirt uses a deep shade for the lower tier, graduating the color to lighter as the flat tiers approach the waistline.

Designers who cater to youth are giving much thought and time to the creating of evening wraps for the girl in her teens. Those who have made a study of apparelling the younger generation have decided that certain furs are essentially youthful in appearance.

First and foremost among youthful dressy furs is gray fox, and this is being lavished on the formal wraps for the young daughter of the household. From a distinguished Paris atelier comes the exquisite wrap pictured here to the right. It is handsomely furred in gray fox, and thus they are not—and what cares youth if the "looks" be there.

FURRED IN WHITE AND GRAY

The very newest thing for chic winter resort wear is the straight wrap-around cape. French imports include hand-painted white velvet ones done in bright futuristic design. Often a white fur collar is extended into tuxedo revers down each side of the front, such as grace the wrap to the left in the picture. This youthful cape made of white cloth would be practical not only for immediate wear, when Valentine parties bid the girl in her teens to come and look her prettiest, but for future wear over the sheer print frocks which the mode declares are again to be fashionable, such a wrap would prove ideal.

Silver lame trimmed with white rabbit fur is the joy and the pride of the young girl this season. The smartest types are of the straight narrow coat genre.

Tulle Dance Frocks

Tulle is considerably in evidence, often for ruffled dance frocks where the edges are picoted with gold or silver thread, or sprinkled with sparkling sequins or rhinestones.

Bags of Suede

Bags of suede with blocked designs of irregular squares and diamonds follow the modernistic trend. The stones of gray and tan are in harmony with the smart shades for street costumes.

Necklaces of Crystal

Necklaces of crystal, which have long oblong rondules and at every third one a pear-shaped drop of crystal, are exquisitely beautiful and in keeping with the tendency toward scintillant fashions.

Choker of Large Pearls

The choker of large pearls takes on a new aspect if it is fastened with an enormous chou of tulle in a color that matches the frock.

Albert Rooke Makes His Comeback

Wins six-year fight for health. Now well and strong at 60. Husky as ever, he praises Tanlac

At 1830 West 39th Place, Los Angeles, lives Albert A. Rooke, a respected citizen with 38 years of active railroad experience. He tells of a very interesting experience.

"About seven years ago," says Mr. Rooke, "my stomach and liver went back on me. It was a most distressing experience. Nothing seemed to agree with me; I lost all desire for food. A sound night's sleep was out of the question, so I rose each morning tired and pepless. Then constipation developed and made life a continuous misery. I lost weight and could hardly drag myself around a good deal of the time. After six years of that I was all in. Along came the 'flu' when I had no resistance left. That was about the last straw. Nothing seemed to help me.

"On a friend's advice I tried Tanlac, and that certainly did help. I soon began to get refreshing sleep again, to eat with old-time zest. The distressing stomach and liver troubles disappeared. Briefly, Tanlac put me on my feet, with all my old-time vigor and enjoyment of life. I put on weight and after five bottles was as well as ever in my life. That was a year ago. I'm still in fine shape, as you see. Men of 60 are as well as I am, thanks to Tanlac."

Tanlac is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from roots, herbs and barks by the famous Tanlac formula. Try a bottle—it may do for you what it did for Mr. Rooke. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

Sorrow Uncalled For

When the very much alive Bernice Dennis arrived at Arkansas City, Kans., from Portland, Ore., she was greeted by weeping relatives and friends, who had already completed her funeral arrangements. The mixup was caused by a mistake of a single word in a telegram. The telegram sent said: "Bernice left at 4 p. m. Arrive there Thursday." In the telegram received the word "left" had become "died."

She Paid the Fees

The married life of a Sydney (Australia) couple threatened to be a stormy one from the outset. As the couple was entering the church a dispute arose as to who would pay the pastor for marrying them. The man, says the Sydney Bulletin, had been giving his betrothed a part of his wages for a considerable time and contended that she should pay the pastor from this fund. She had other views on the subject, but when the man refused to go through with the ceremony unless she paid the parson's fees the young woman complied.

Too Much "Acid?"

Excess Uric Acid Gives Rise to Many Unpleasant Troubles.

AUTHORITIES agree that an excess of uric acid is primarily due to faulty kidney action. Retention of this toxic material often makes its presence felt by sore, painful joints, a tired, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backache and headache. That the kidneys are not functioning right is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Thousands assist their kidneys at such times by the use of Doan's Pills — a stimulant diuretic. Doan's are recommended by many local people. Ask your neighbor!

News of Menlo Park

Peter Viarisco, a gardener at the Sharon estate for a long time, passed away Sunday following a brief illness. He is survived by a wife and two children. The funeral took place last Wednesday from Redwood City. Mr. Viarisco was well-known in Menlo Park.

The board of trustees of Atherton is preparing to rock the shoulders of the Middlefield Road included in the town limits. The portion outside the boundary of the incorporation has already been done by Supervisor MacBain.

Carmel O'Keefe, young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. O'Keefe, was operated upon for appendicitis at the Palo Alto hospital last Saturday. She is convalescent and is expected home today.

Elmer Miller and family are here from Kansas City on an extended visit to W. E. Monore, uncle of Mr. Miller. The Millers contemplate buying property here and making Menlo Park their permanent home.

Howard Brickell, well-known sportsman, capitalist and son of a pioneer California family, died last Sunday at his home in San Francisco. He was a brother of Mrs. Stuart Middlemas of Menlo Park. A brother passed away several months' ago. He was born in San Francisco on July 13, 1879, and had lived there all his life. His father, John Brickell, came to California on the barque "Kirkland" in 1849. The father, who died in 1894, was the owner of the property known for years as Baker's Beach, then comprising about 80 acres. The family subsequently developed the property into the residential district now known as Sea Cliff. Howard Brickell was for years a member of the firm of Landis & Brickell, agents for the London Guarantee and Accident Co., Ltd., and also president of the John Brickell Company. He was a member of the Family, Olympic and San Francisco Golf and Country clubs and an ardent golfer and sportsman.

Leonide M. McKinnon, who passed away on the Steamer Yale on January 11 while on his way from Hollywood to visit his sister, Miss Fannie McKinnon here, was well-known on peninsula. He was a graduate of St. Ignatius College and a son of the late J. McKinnon, the pioneer lumber magnate and shipping man of San Fracisco. Mr. McKinnon was engaged in the moving picture business in Hollywood. He was a talented man with a strong liking for dramatics. He was a member of the Olympic and Family Clubs of San Francisco, and often arranged the former's program for the summer outing in the grove in Sonoma County. His sister passed away only a few months ago. The McKinnons have a home on Glenwood avenue. The family is well-known in the state.

It was rumored yesterday that the White-Shearer holding of 126 acres on the highway with a big frontage on Selby Lane, was sold to a syndicate of Atherton property owners, to be subdivided into an exclusive residential tract. The property has been producing strawberries for the past four years. It is said the sum of $380,000 was paid for the choice realty. It is a portion of the old Selby ranch.

A movement has been started by people of Palo Alto and Menlo Park to look into the feasibility of extending Willow Road through the Hopkins estate to connect with the State Highway below the San Francisquito Creek Bridge. It proposed to construct a subway uder the railroad tracks which are elevated considerable by a heavy grade at that point. This would give the travelling public a direct road to Dumbarton Bridge from the State Highway with the underpass that would insure safety. If ever the tract is subdivided no doubt this will be done, as it would greatly benefit the holding which is one of the vnest properties in the county.

At a meeting of the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce held Monday evening the matter of widening and straightening Willow road as it leaves the Bay Road and passes the base hospital was taken up and discussed by the body and considerable length. It was shown that this thoroughfare is the main road to Dumbarton bridge and travel routed on that highway would divert the travel coming off the bridge to Menlo Park. A committee was appointed to interview the property owners abutting on the road with a view of having them donate to the county a sufficient strip of land so that the sharp curves and angels could be overcome. O'Keefe Brothers have already dedicated eleven feet of their property to the county for this purpose. If the other owners do likewise, Willow road will be able to take care of the traffic. The committee appointed is D. E. O'Keefe, Mark A. McCann, E. E. Quayle and W. J. Murray.

The opening of the Dumbarton bridge has already borne good results for Menlo Park. Three families moved here during the week, the heads of whom will be employed permanently at the bridge. They are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kennedy, who have taken the Lightbody residence on Bradle street, Mr. and Mrs. J. Mu[illegible], occupying the Meyer cott[illegible] on Menlo avenue, and Mr. and Mrs. Harley. There is a scarcity of furnished and unfurnished houses here. Many applicants for homes are turned away daily.

This evening in the New Menlo Theatre "Blarey" will be shown. Comedy, "Open House." Tomorrow evening, "The Wilderness of Woman," will be featured. Tuesday evening, amateur night, Reginald Denny in "Rolling Home;" Wednesday evening the Menlo Park Improvemet Club will present the Kelly Playrs in three acts; Thursday night "High Steppers;" Friday evening "Rustler's Ranch."

The J. L. Eiselstein home on Oak Grove avenue was sold this week to D. Boardman of San Francisco through J. L. Mollenhauer, the local realty broker.

St. Joseph's Alumni will give a card party in Duff and Doyle hall next Friday evening, January 28. Valuable prizes will be given the winners of the game. Several door prizes will also be awarded. This will be a big event. A sextette of pretty girls will do the "punching."

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dolbeck of Ticonderoga, New York, are here on a visit to their son Elmer N. Dolbeck and his pretty wife. Mr. Dolbeck senior up until the first of the year was the Mayor of Ticonderoga for many years. This is his third visit to California but his first stay in Menlo Park. He likes it here very much.

William Bendel, who has lived in the Stanton cottage on Mills avenue for some time, passed away at the Palo Alto hospital early Thursday morning as the result of injuries received Wednesday when a huge limb of a tree fell upon him while working on the grounds of the Michael estate. On his arrival at the hospital it was found that he was suffering from severe internal injuries. Mr. Bendel is survived by his wife, Louisa Bendel. He was a native of Germany and was 38 years of age.

The following communication was received at the last meeting of the Chamber of Commerce:

"Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce, Menlo Park, Calif.

"Dear Sirs: In the current issue of the 'Times-Gazette,' I notice a news item announcing that the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce favors the Spaulding Bill, and Annexation to Palo Alto.

"Although I am not a member of your association, I wish as a property owner, to heartily endorse your action.

"In the event that Menlo Park is annexed to Palo Alto, and proper building restrictions drafted, we shall immediately improve with substantial buildings, our property in Menlo Park. In this respect I may also add that the Doyle Estate coincide with the above view. Until such time as our investment can be protected, it is obvious that we cannot improve our property in the manner we should like to. In view of the existing circumstances, if this annexation can be arranged, it seems to present the only solution, ad both the Duff and Doyle estates are strongly in favor of it.

"Yours very truly,

"J. E. DUFF."

The monthly "Song Service" is becoming one of the most popular features of the activities of the Menlo Park Presbyterian church. Last Sunday evening there was a capacity audience present to enjoy the musical program. The Sunday school orchestra of fifteen pieces is functioning and furnisehd two numbers for the service. Prof. Carrington was present and sang three solos. A variety of music and community singing filled in the hour and a half program and all present seemed to enjoy the event and voted for others to follow. Mrs. J. E. Cooper and Miss McCormack were a music committee, who have been conducting a campaign for funds for the music of the church. They reported over $177 for the fund. New hymnals have already been purchased and were dedicated at the Song Service last Sunday evening. Music for the orchestra and the choir will be purchased and the fund will be used to promote better music in the church and community.

The ladies of the Presbyterian Church will give a "Bean Supper" next Friday evening from six to eight. After the supper the patrons will be invited to enjoy a Scotch program under the direction of Mrs. J. E. Cooper. Mrs. Forsythe, an accomplished singer of Redwood City, has been secured to sing a group of Scotch songs, and other Scotch music is being provided. A good time is promised to all who attend.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church at its regular meeting last Wednesday afternoon elected officers for the next six months, as follows: President, Paul Bearce; vice-president, Freda Snover; secretary, Lola Lightbody; treasurer, Charles Baker. Mrs. Bearse and Mrs. Snover are the superintendents.

Rev. W. L. Bone will preach morning and evening nert Sunday, using the following subjects: 11 a. m., "Spiritual Reserve Fund," 7.30 p. m., "The God That Was Put to Bed."

Men Of Vision

The ability of practical men to dream dreams and see visions—and then make their dreams and visions into a workable, functioning reality—accounts for whatever material progress the human race has made. Such men make up the Skaggs-Safeway organization, because only men of this type can hope to qualify as Safeway Men.

Above all, the Sofeway Man must possess the vision to see that his every transaction with you is a matter of vital importance; he must recognize that the opportunity for public service carries with it an obligation to the public, his associates and himself, and he must know that by association with those already trained in efficient methods his personal growth is assured and the way to the maximum in accomplishment and success through service is opened for him. With such a realization the training for his life-work begins. What he accomplishes and how it affects you will be explained here from week to week. Meanwhile, the savings below are available to you—RIGHT NOW!
